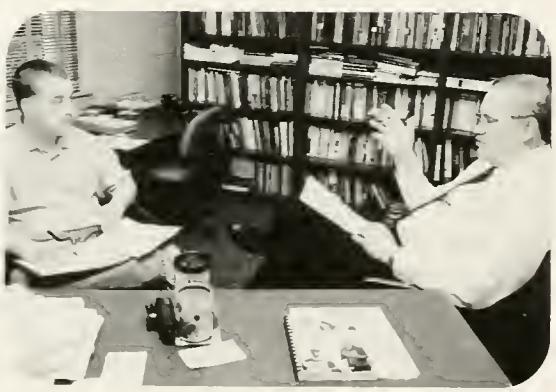
All the Way

by Angela Lachney



GWU Senior Justin Alston has had to overcome many battles in his life. He underwent five brain surgeries from Aug. 1999 through Dec. 2000. Alston suffers from Arteriovenous Malformation, or A V M. This is an entanglement of blood vessels and ventricles in the brain. He has had several surgeries to implant a shunt to drain spinal fluid from his head into his stomach. "The good Lord has performed many miracles," Alston said. "I try to live each day like the A.V.M. is gone but at the same time remember it's still there." This, however, has not stopped him. "My health problems have made me work harder because I don't want things given to me." Alston said. Every morning Alston wakes up, thankful for a new day. "Every morning I have life for breakfast," Alston said. He feels that he has been made stronger by his sickness. It has helped him see many people worry about silly things and has made him more appreciative of life. Alston has been on the Student Alumni Council for four years, and currently serves as the Vice President. He was Commuter Committee Chairman for one year, manager for the Men's Basketball Team for over a year, and was involved in the Sports Management Club for one year. Justin was a member of the Math Club for three years and was an intramural basketball and softball coach. In his spare time Alston likes to listen to all types of music, shoot basketball, and spend time with friends. Some of his many community service activities include being a little league baseball coach, a coach for the YMCA, and church league basketball coach. He is still very involved in his home church in Greensboro, NC. During Homecoming week, Alston was named the Future Alumnus of the Year. "It made me feel that a lot of hard work has paid off," he said. Alston enjoyed all of his classes at GWU, and felt that all of his classes were challenging, but he did not mind because he loves to learn. Alston graduated in May with a degree in sports management and physical education. He has set many personal goals such as attending graduate school in the future. He has not decided on a specific university, but would love to come back to Gardner-Webb. Alston is very interested in pursuing further degrees in physical education, sports management, or possibly business. Another goal for Alston is to eventually coach college basketball. He would love to be able to coach at GWU if the opportunity arises. "Part of me will always be with Gardner-Webb," said Alston

Idol Man

by Chris Armstrong

Gardner-Webb student Jerry Wease and hit television show American Idol have literally crossed sidewalks. The night prior to Wease's first audition for American Idol in Atlanta, he slept on the sidewalk to keep his place in line for the next day's auditions. Wease was one of nearly 3,000 people who lined up on an Atlanta sidewalk last month to try out for the show. "I could barely talk before the first audition," said Wease. To protect his voice from the cold, he drank tea, honey and lemon before his performance. His voice survived the cold night out on the street. During his time in line, Wease was encouraged by others and made new friends. "It was a blast," said Wease. "I met so many talented people. Being around others who share my dream was wonderful!" For his performance, Wease sang "God Must Have Spent a Little More Time" by N*SYNC. Judges stopped him as he sang and asked him to sing again in front of Paula Abdul, Randy Jackson and Simon Cowell. "At that point, I was nervous," Wease said. Judges narrowed the contestants down to 500, then 50, then 20. Wease made it through all three rounds and was a part of the top 20 contestants that performed in the final round at a private mansion.

"They [the judges] were really supportive," said Wease. "Simon was very complementary of my performance."Wease was selected as the second alternate from the group that auditioned in Atlanta. Even though he may not become the next American Idol, Wease is content with how far he went. "Who could be disappointed with a 12 place out of 3,000?" Wease said. He will, however, be featured on the DVD to be released after the show airs.

Big Move

by Jennifer Menster

Over the 2002-2003 school year, Gardner-Webb sports teams competed in a new conference.

Not only were the teams officially DI status, but they have become the 12th member in the Atlantic Sun Conference. The university joined other teams of DI status, such as Virginia Tech University, University of Michigan, UNC-Chapel Hill and many other schools.

"I think we will do well against them," said Chuck Burch, GW athletic director. "I am optimistic overall."

GWU became an official member of the Atlantic Sun Conference during the summer of 2002. Other schools in the conference are: Florida Atlantic, Troy State, Central Florida, Samford University, Stetson University, Jacksonville University (Florida), Jacksonville State University (Alabama), Georgia State, Mercer University, Campbell University and Belmont University.

GW's football, wrestling, swimming and men's track teams were not Atlantic Sun members. The football team was in the Big South Conference, which rejected GW in all other sports. The A-Sun Conference did not sponsor the other three sports.

Compared to other schools, Gardner-Webb is small in population, but equal in the number of student athletes. GW has a school population of about 3,000. The number of student athletes is approximately 400. At the University of Central Florida, located in Orlando, Fla., the population is 39,000 people. Georgia State University has a population of 27,000. However, the numbers of athletes at those colleges are 405 and 200, respectively.

"I feel we can win at this level," said Tom Cole, head softball coach. "We played some Division I schools last season and played really well."

The excitement of playing tougher teams has caused more student and athlete enthusiasm, said Burch. Attendance at many sporting events has improved during the last two years, which were called reclassification years. Burch also said athletes have played tougher and their GPAs have improved as well.

"My girls are very excited," Cole said. "They feel they will do well this year."
